A longtime marijuana activist who co-founded a music festival in Boulder will receive the city's annual Great Outdoors Award later this month. The news was first reported by BuzzFeed, which said the award will be presented to Deborah Sue-Park, who has been involved with the "Rock Growers of Colorado" festival since its early days. The Great Outdoors Award, sponsored by the Downtown Boulder Partnership, is presented to city residents and non-residents for "outstanding use of outdoor spaces." Winners receive a certificate, a plaque and a $1,000 cash prize. Rock Growers, held the week of Labor Day each year at the South Boulder Rec Center, was created in response to Colorado's referendum legalizing recreational marijuana, which took place in November. The festival was conceived in part by Marijuana Growers Cooperative and Colorado Hemp Association, two nonprofit organizations co-founded by Park. Park, who has been involved with the festival since 2006, said she hopes Rock Growers will provide educational opportunities about cannabis, and foster acceptance of the drug among the community. "It has the potential to do a lot of good," she said. "I hope that it will make people more comfortable with cannabis. It was founded on education, not aggression." Park, who is also an activist with the Medical Marijuana Industry Group of Colorado, said that for years she has tried to get Rock Growers recognized as an award-worthy festival, but has run into a number of roadblocks along the way. "There wasn't that one push to say, 'This is why we do it and here are the numbers,'" she said. "I don't think it would have happened without the push from other people." In 2013, Rock Growers was featured in a national television broadcast on CBS' "60 Minutes." "Deborah Sue-Park brought awareness of the grassroots community of people who have successfully started and run a non-profit agricultural cooperative and a hemp industry association, and whose vision is to make the world a better place," said Barbara Kelly, executive director of the Downtown Boulder Partnership, in a statement. "Deborah has the foresight to bring in new ways of thinking about cannabis and the marijuana industry to Boulder." Lara Walsh, executive director of Boulder's Film Office, said the collaboration between Rock Growers 570a42141b
